What's your favorite Halloween memory?

Scott (@iptib): When my neighbor let us have as many Reese's Peanut Butter Cups as we wanted!

Elliott (@geektome): When I dressed like a ghost and all I got was a bag of rocks.

Brandi Wall (@brandi_w60): Running from the po-po with eggs in my bra. I so love Halloween!

Sony is retiring the cassette Walkman. Which gadget is next?

Scott: The DVD player. Everything's gonna stream soon, baby!

Elliott: Wait, Sony was still making cassette players?

Ryan Justice (@rsjustice): The Bluetooth headset. Wishful thinking...

Where should Katy Perry and Russell Brand go for their honeymoon?

Scott: Whatever planet they came from.

Elliott: The Land of Misfit Toys. They'd totally blend in there.

Alek Babel (@alekbabel): Sesame Street. If that doesn't work out, maybe Avenue Q will take them.

THREE FOR ALL

The economic reality is bleak for many Americans in their 20s. Here's a look at the numbers.

17%

» Unemployment for 20- to 24-year-olds hit a record high of more than 17 percent earlier this year, according to the Labor Department.

9.3%

» Even for young adults with college degrees, the jobless rate has averaged 9.3 percent this year.

35

» In the two years before the recession, adults younger than 35 were borrowing so heavily—especially for education—that their savings rates ran in the negative teens, according to Moody's analysis of Federal Reserve data.

PRIME-TIME UNEMPLOYED

Los Angeles Times

As the nation struggles with the aftermath of the Great Recession, few groups have suffered greater setbacks or face greater long-term damage than Americans in their 20s—damage that could shadow their entire working lives.

Unemployment for 20- to 24-year-olds hit a record high of more than 17 percent earlier this year. Even for young adults with college degrees, the jobless rate has averaged 9.3 percent this year, double the figure for older graduates, according to the Labor Department.

20-SOMETHINGS
THE HARDEST HIT
BY AFTERMATH OF RECESSION

Adding to the effects, surveys by the Pew Research Center indicate, a greater share of workers in their 20s lost hours or were cut down to part-time status than any other age group. And their incomes have fallen more sharply, even as they are far more likely than others to say they are working harder than ever.

“These are young workers just trying to establish a connection to work, and it will cause permanent damage to long-term pay. This crisis has the potential for scarring,” said Ron Blackwell, chief economist at the AFL-CIO.

The effect of the recession is reflected in the fact that many young Americans who started out living independently are moving back home with their parents because they are unable to survive financially.

Also, new Census Bureau figures show that couples increasingly are postponing marriage and parenthood, waiting for their financial prospects to improve. Meanwhile, more young families are falling into poverty.

“It makes you almost want to cry for the future of our country,” said Andrew Sum, director of the Center for Labor Market Studies at Northeastern University in Boston.

These developments, beyond their effects on individuals, are signs of significant and painful changes for the whole country.

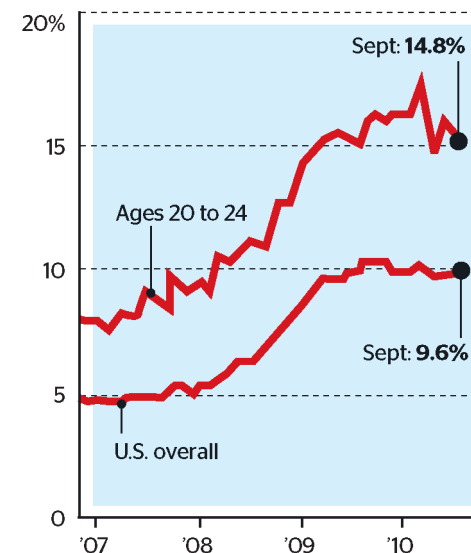

For decades, adult life, especially for college graduates, began with entry-level jobs that paid well and promised even better things to come. Those bright prospects encouraged young workers to go out on their own, marry and start families—bolstering the overall economy.

But now, with so many unemployed or underemployed—and others underwater on their mortgages or with little hope of buying houses of their own—the spending they once provided simply isn't there now.

Moreover, low starting pay means that future earnings probably will be depressed as well because most workers see their incomes increase slowly and steadily over the course of their careers, not in big jumps.

Riders sound off on a certain 'L' line

For a few CTA riders, things aren't so rosy on the Pink Line. One rider complained about loud music on the Pink Line while another griped about the number of train cars. Both riders shared their West Side stories at RedEye's CTA forum, getsatisfaction.com/goingpublic.

Here's a look at some of the problems plaguing the 4-year-old Pink Line, which sees about 28,500 daily weekday riders on average, beating only the Yellow Line in weekday ridership.

Pink rock

Some riders on the Pink Line turn their music up so loud that we can hear it clearly through their earphones. The tinny, annoying sound can really get on your nerves. Even earplugs can't block the sound at times. And we can still hear it if we move to the other end of the car.

Lately, however, the situation has gone from bad to worse. Boys and even women are wearing one earphone and letting the other dangle on their chests or stomach. Some especially rude riders just play their cell phones as if they are radios, no earphones at all.

Pink cushion

So as I watched the 7:22 a.m. train arrive to Kostner, I could only wonder one thing. Why does the Pink Line only have four cars? It's ridiculous.

By the time the train gets to Kostner—which is only two stops away from 54th and Cermak, mind you—it's already full! Every morning, after power walking six blocks to the "L" stop, I have to stand because the trains are packed by the time we hit Pulaski.

You would think with all of the gentrification that they would add more cars, huh? But I guess invasion of the hipsters is not a good enough reason for the city to care a bit more.

WHERE ARE THE RATS?

CHICAGO'S RODENTS MIGHT NOT BE LIVING WHERE YOU EXPECT

By Leonor Vivanco
REDEYE

What neighborhood comes to mind when Chicagoans think about rats? The Loop clocked in at No. 1, followed by the South Loop and the Lakeview and Wrigleyville area, according to the results of a new survey commissioned by d-CON, a brand of rodent bait and traps. Respondents to the online survey were asked about their perceptions of neighborhoods with rodent problems.

A city representative dismissed the results—released Monday to coincide with what some municipalities have dubbed National Rodent Prevention Month—when RedEye checked in with the Department of Streets and Sanitation.

“We don’t put much stock in [the] poll,” said Matt Smith, spokesman for the department. “We’re out there every day in the alleys of Chicago and know firsthand about what we’re dealing with.”

Some Chicagoans weren’t swayed either.

“I haven’t really seen any rats,” said Mark McWilliams, 21, an Art Institute student who lives in the Loop. “I don’t know where they would live. From what I’ve seen, the Loop is pretty clean so it is surprising.”

Garfield Park resident Carlyn Crispell, 22, said, “I’ve seen a couple [downtown], but I see a lot more in residential areas.” She’s spotted them in gardens, yards and alleys in her neighborhood and others.

But Crispell’s not that squeamish about the occasional rodent sighting. “They’re kind of cute,” she said.

The survey, conducted last month by research firm Sentient Decision Science, asked 200 Chicagoans to name the top three neighborhoods where they are most concerned about rat infestation. The survey’s margin of error is 3.5 percent, and more than half—52 percent—said they have never seen a rat in the neighborhood where they live.

BEDBUGS VS. RATS

Bedbug reports have been nonstop and were even the focus of a two-day summit in suburban Rosemont last month. Oh, the humanity! Will rats get the same treatment on the heels of a "where-are-the-rats-at" survey released Monday by a rodent control company? Do they have what it takes to be a media darling? Sounds like the perfect opportunity for a Faceoff. REDEYE

These critters snuggle with you—and bite—in bed. Eeew!

Some people keep the chunky, furry rodents as pets

They're in the Empire State building! Bloomingdales! Movie theaters! Bedbug reports are coming from everywhere.

The last time a rat was noticed in NYC, it was 1990. And that rat was Splinter, from "Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles."

The parasites hide themselves on your bed and in your luggage. Never know when they'll strike. Bwa-ha-ha!

Though their beady eyes might be scary to humans, the rats are the ones who are scurrying away from us. Take that, rats.

OVERALL WINNER

Was it ever really a contest? Creepy-crawly bedbugs will continue to dominate the public's imagination. Rats? Some people actually think they're cute.

ceived to be the "rattiest," according to the survey, had fewer complaints this year through mid-October than during the same period last year, Smith said.

Citywide, rodent complaints are up slightly from last year but lower than two years ago, he said.

The number of complaints generally are cyclical and can be affected by weather, Smith said. For example, a cold winter can kill rats, thus the number of complaints drop. The city doesn't have a list of its "rattiest" neighborhoods—there's no reliable tracking system since rats depend on human population and behavior, according to the Tribune.

Meghan Van Horn, Sentient Decision Science market research manager, said the survey examined perceptions of rat problems in Chicago; it didn't track down actual rat numbers.

But perceptions don't always match reality. RedEye's attempt to find a good Loop-focused rat story came up somewhat short. Loop dwellers who spoke to RedEye didn't have any over-the-top tales of rats in their 'hood.

Dan Wang, who lives and works in the survey's rat capital, said he's glimpsed only a few of the rodents in the past year. "Mostly you find them around the subway," said Wang, 25.

Harold Washington College student Kashoni Jones, 19, says she's spotted rats not in the Loop but in her Austin neighborhood. "There's a lot of trash—that's what they're drawn to," she said.

Chicago's ongoing rodent control battle starts and ends with trash. The Department of Streets and Sanitation has cited restaurants for creating dirty conditions that attract rats, such as overflowing Dumpsters. The city literature urges residents to make sure their garbage can lids are shut and to tidy potential nesting areas for rats such as yards with high weeds and clutter. Dog owners are encouraged to pick up after their pets to cut off rodents' food supply.

Wherever they're found, rats are for now a solid part of city lore—even if they show themselves only for a moment.

Brian LaCrosse, 31, thinks he once saw a rat dart down an alley at night when he lived in Lincoln Park, though he said it could've been a squirrel.

Rodent control signs "are more in your face than actual rats," he said.

Nadya Lebedeva: There was a bar on the North-side, and we used to play "rat" while looking out the window ... The rats were plentiful and we screamed RAT every time we saw one... Last one to say it had to buy everyone a shot... When life hands you rats... Have the slow schmuck buy the shots!!! ;o)

Justinn McDaniel: Last winter my car wouldn't start, so I had it towed to a garage for inspection, thinking the winter weather had taken its toll on my Focus. Turns out a family of rats decided my warm car was a nice place to build a nest, so they moved in near my engine, chewed every wire under my hood, and caused $800 in damage. Awesome.

Ryan Swartz: A rat used to hang out by my car in the lot behind my building, but never actually nested. After a while, I came to feel some sense of kinship with the rat, whom I named Juan.

Next stop: Rail service to Iowa City

Chicago Tribune

A long-sought plan for a new Amtrak route between Chicago and Iowa City with stops in the Quad Cities received a major funding boost Monday, along with initiatives to run faster passenger trains on existing Midwest rail corridors from Chicago to Wisconsin and Michigan.

But a request from Illinois for an $8 million federal grant to begin in-depth studies on developing 220 mph passenger service sometime in the future was denied by the U.S. Department of Transportation, which handed out the largest pots of money Monday to California and Florida's 220 mph high-speed rail programs.

Officials in Illinois, where the focus is building an emerging high-speed rail network with passenger trains topping out at 110 mph, said they will try again for more money next year.

"We are certainly still committed to the 220 [mph]," Illinois Transportation Secretary Gary Hannig said Monday. "I think we'll put our heads together to determine our next options."

The major success for the Midwest in the Obama administration's second round of rail funding was a $230 million federal grant to Iowa and Illinois to establish the new Amtrak service between Chicago and Iowa City, with travel times of less than five hours projected end to end. The train also would stop in Moline.

The line is scheduled for completion in 2015, assuming a steady continuation of funding, officials said.

Two daily round trips are planned for the Chicago-Quad Cities-Iowa City route. Initial top speeds will be 79 mph, which is Amtrak's current limit. Longer-term plans call for additional daily round trips and increasing speeds to 90 mph and perhaps to 110 mph, officials said.

The project is expected to create almost 600 jobs during design and construction, while $25 million per year in increased business activity is forecast once the new service is operating, according to U.S. Sens. Dick Durbin (D-Ill.) and Tom Harkin (D-Iowa).

STORM WARNING

Chicago Tribune

People in the Chicago area are used to a little wind. But on Tuesday and Wednesday, the gusts are expected to be so strong that a walk down Michigan Avenue could feel like a scene from "The Wizard of Oz."

This storm is likely to be anything but magical—with wind gusts up to 60 mph and sustained winds of about 35 mph. The National Weather Service warned that the strong winds could cause major problems across the area, including falling tree limbs, structural damage, downed power lines and widespread power outages.

The massive storm, packing lightning and heavy downpours, was expected to begin its two-day sweep through the area in the predawn hours Tuesday, the result of a low-pressure system that the western Great Lakes and upper Midwest region has not experienced in decades.

"The storm system will be one of the most powerful we have seen in this part of the country in more than 70 years," said Jim Allsopp, a meteorologist for the National Weather Service. "This is a big deal."

Early-morning thunderstorms are expected to be followed by high winds throughout the day, possibly affecting both morning and evening commutes. The winds will taper off Tuesday night and pick up again Wednesday before the system moves out of the area that night, according to the weather service.

In preparation, residents were advised to park vehicles in a garage, secure all windows and doors and tie down garbage cans, barbecue grills and anything else that could blow away.

Watchdog says city will be short $1 billion per year

Chicago Tribune

Chicago's top internal watchdog on Monday offered up ideas to improve the bottom line at City Hall in the face of chronic budget shortfalls, but Mayor Daley's administration and several aldermen dismissed his suggestions as warmed-over.

Inspector General Joseph Ferguson said the city will be short $1 billion or more a year for the foreseeable future and cannot continue making one-time fixes such as tapping the proceeds from the leases of the Chicago Skyway and city parking meter system.

"Say it ain't so, Joe, say it ain't so," responded City Council Finance Committee Chairman Edward Burke (14th) at a budget hearing. He was referring to one proposal to save nearly $5.3 million by ending free sewer service for senior citizens.

Ferguson, who declined to be interviewed, said in the report he simply was offering options, not making recommendations, that could cut costs by as much as $247.4 million a year.

The options include reducing to four the number of firefighters on each engine and truck, in keeping with levels in some other major cities, to save $66.6 million a year. Having private industry take over the city's garbage and recycling pickup would save $112.2 million.

City Budget Director Eugene Munin threw cold water on the proposals, saying they "could put public safety at risk, disregard the needs of some of the most vulnerable residents of our city and necessitate nearly $90 million in new fees for Chicago residents during the worst recession in more than 70 years."

Sarah Pezel of St. Charles speaks to reporters Monday after a peaceful protest at Northern Illinois University against police handling of the investigation into Antinette "Toni" Keller's disappearance was canceled. SCOTT STRAZZANTE/TRIBUNE

NIU awaits news on remains

Chicago Tribune

Northern Illinois University freshman Natalie Keith now texts or calls her mother when she arrives at class and before she leaves campus—as well as a few times in between—just to report that she's OK.

Like many NIU parents, Keith's mom expressed mounting anxiety for her daughter's safety after authorities announced over the weekend that they recovered human remains and items possibly belonging to freshman Antinette "Toni" Keller, who has been missing for almost two weeks.

"Basically, I have to come to school, go to class, go home," said Keith, who commutes to NIU in DeKalb from her family's North Aurora home. "It's totally extreme, but I do understand. It's good reasoning."

Some students and parents say their fears are compounded by a lack of information from university officials or authorities, who all declined Monday to release new details in the case.

No one has explained what happened to Keller, and officials have not identified the remains. Authorities have called it a "death investigation," not a homicide case, but school officials have heightened security on campus and locked student dorms earlier than usual. There is a greater police presence on campus, and campus buses are running expanded hours. Many students wore yellow clothing Monday in Keller's memory.

Keller, an art student from Plainfield, disappeared Oct. 14 after telling friends she was going for a walk toward Prairie Park, just south of Route 38.

DeKalb Police Chief Bill Feithen on Saturday announced that police found remains and belongings, but Monday he said police had found the items before Saturday's announcement.

He declined to say when or why the news was not released earlier. A family spokesman said Keller's family was informed of the discovery the same day police announced it.

Feithen said he and the DeKalb County state's attorney plan to hold a news conference with more details Tuesday.

NIU officials have scheduled a gathering in Keller's honor for 6 p.m. Tuesday in the Duke Ellington Ballroom of the Holmes Student Center.

NIU parent Ronda Champney said that until she hears evidence Keller's disappearance was an isolated incident, she'll fear for the worst: that Keller was murdered and there's a killer loose on campus.

"It's just scary that there might be someone out there," she said.

Lower Back Pain?

Are You or Someone You Know Suffering From Lower Back Pain?

Northwestern University is seeking volunteers who have lower back pain in order to determine where the pain is recognized in the brain. Participants will also be evaluated to determine why pain goes away for some people while it remains for others. This is a 12 month study consisting of 1 visit at the Rehabilitation Institute of Chicago and 5 MRI scans at Northwestern Memorial Hospital's Olson Pavilion. All visits will take place in downtown Chicago.

Eligible participants must:

- Be 18 years or older

Beach open after shark attack

2 A California beach that had been closed since Friday in the wake of a fatal shark attack was reopened to the public Monday, according to Vandenberg Air Force Base, which administers Surf Beach. A 19-year-old college student who was boarding off Surf Beach died after a 14- to 20-foot shark bit off his left leg.

Twisters ravage northeast Texas

5 Authorities in northeast Texas were assessing damage Monday after a tornado destroyed homes, knocked train cars off their tracks and injured at least four people.

Five homes in Rice, Texas, were destroyed as 125 mph winds whipped through a seven-mile swath of Navarro County on Sunday evening, said Eric Meyers, the county's emergency management coordinator.

Meyers rode out the tornado inside a vehicle and videotaped the twister as it tore the roof off a school about a block away.

"We are in the tornado! We are in the tornado!" Meyers yells several times in the video.

"The sheer power was just amazing," Meyers said Monday.

The storm also turned over an 18-wheeler truck onto a passenger car, knocked 11 cars from a freight train off their tracks and caused extensive damage to Rice Elementary School, Navarro County Chief Deputy Mike Cox said.

Four people were taken to the hospital with minor injuries, he said.

In addition to "significant damage" from the storm moving through Navarro County, witnesses also reported possible tornadoes in other parts of northeast Texas on Sunday evening, the National Weather Service said.

Red-faced

Lovie admits he should have challenged key play in Bears' loss

Chicago Tribune

Earlier this month when the Bears started their roster shuffle of defensive linemen, Lovie Smith declared, "We don't have any regrets."

The head coach found one Monday, when he admitted he should have thrown the red flag for a replay challenge when Jay Cutler fumbled on a quarterback sneak at the Redskins' 1-yard line early in the third quarter Sunday. Replays showed the ball crossed the plane of the goal line before London Fletcher knocked it out.

Certainly, the Bears stood a better chance sending referee Walt Anderson to review the fumble than the play before when Earl Bennett's knee was down after a 48-yard catch before he reached the end zone. A replay showed Bennett had not scored, and Smith wound up wasting a timeout and a challenge.

"Yes, I should have," Smith said in a rare admission of error. "Normally, if there's a critical situation, I throw it whether I have a good look or not. I didn't have a great look on it. I need to be able to make that call."

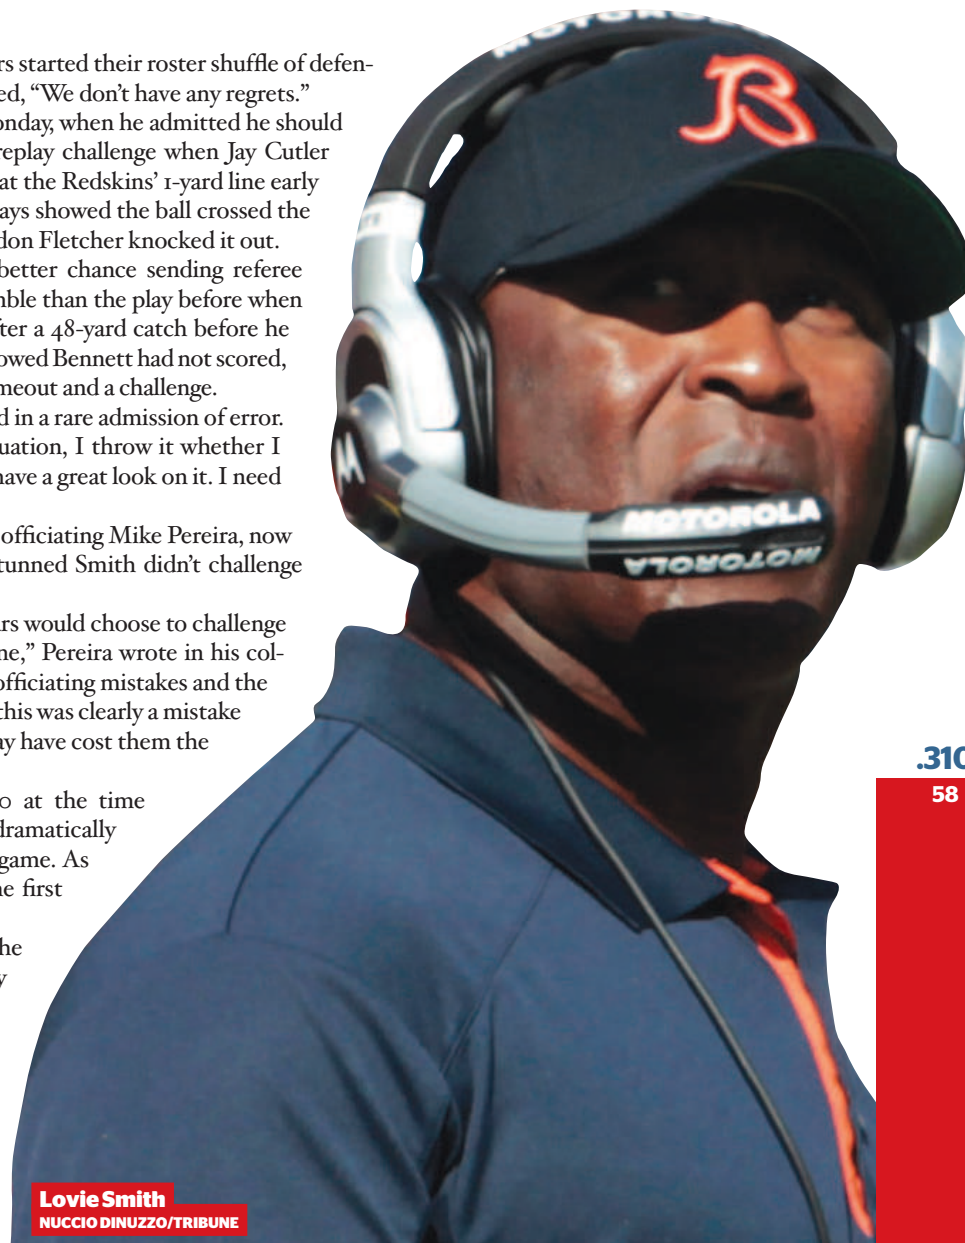

Former NFL vice president of officiating Mike Pereira, now an analyst for Fox Sports, was stunned Smith didn't challenge the play.

"I am flummoxed that the Bears would choose to challenge the previous play and not this one," Pereira wrote in his column. "We can talk all day about officiating mistakes and the impact they have on a game, but this was clearly a mistake by Smith and his coaches that may have cost them the game."

The Bears were leading 14-10 at the time and a touchdown would have dramatically changed the complexion of the game. As it turned out, the fumble was the first of six second-half turnovers.

As indictable is the fact that the offense apparently ran the play the wrong direction—directly at 335-pound defensive tackle Albert Haynesworth.

The Bears had the timeout from the Bennett review to call a play, and instead of going away from Haynesworth, they went right at him.

It's time for a Jaycation

This Sunday I did something I've never done before during a Bears game. I turned it off.

After Jay Cutler continued to build his relationship with his best receiver in Washington's DeAngelo Hall to the tune of a 92-yard touchdown, I had enough and turned it off. Then I had a moment like in "Office Space" where Peter was hypnotized and never came out of it. Suddenly everything was fine in the world. The sun started shining. Birds were singing. And the only Julius in my life was Orange.

I gave the Bears a fair chance (years is a fair chance), and all they've done is play consistently horrible football.

It's not that I'm going to stop being a fan of the Bears or even stop watching the games. But I'm just not caring as they slowly destroy everything good about football. There will be more Cutler picks, Matt Forte stuffings on the goal line and general Lovie Smith decisions. When they happen, I'll probably say, "That sucks" or "I wonder if 'Ghostbusters' is on TV." There's got to be more to life than getting aneurysms every time Cutler throws the ball.

So when I read the reactions of Bears fans on Twitter, all I could do was smile.

When Cutler completed his fourth and final pass to Hall, I was on Miami Beach shooting the "Sports Illustrated" swimsuit issue.

When Forte fumbled the ball away, I was hitting golf balls on the moon.

When Smith failed to throw the challenge flag, I was Jay-Z for the day. The Bears can't bring me down—and for that matter, any NFL team.

Thankfully, the Bears are entering perhaps the most important bye week in football history. Not so much for the players, but for the fans. We need a week away from the anguish and mental torture that is the 2010 Chicago Bears. But that's not enough for me. I'm taking a season-long Jaycation.

This team is going nowhere. And I'm not going with them. I'm taking the rest of this season off. The Bears just had a head start.

five on five

Bye, bye

No Bears on Sunday, but we could have you right here in this spot soon. Sign up at redyechicago.com/5on5.

TOPIC	PHIL THOMPSON plthompson@tribune.com	SCOTT BOLOHAN twitter.com/scottbolohan	JERRY RILES redyechicago.com/5on5	RAHULA STROHL twitter.com/rahulastrohl	EVIL SUPERCOMPUTER redyechicago.com/5on5
1 What will the Bears learn about themselves during the bye week?	I wouldn't put it past Mike Martz to slip out of town in the middle of the night.	Roller-blading isn't nearly as easy as it looks.	That they "are who we thought they were." Not very good!	Nothing they didn't know already but are too disingenuous to admit.	Hopefully, how to say "bye" to a few in the organization.
2 Keith Bogans as starting shooting guard for the Bulls = _____.	the No. 1 spot in college football lately.	the second coming of MJ ... 's scalp.	DeAngelo Hall to Jay Cutler—a nightmare waiting to happen.	pretty much anyone who's been a starting 2-guard since June 14, 1998.	a Commodore 64.
3 Why should Chicago baseball fans watch the World Series?	Juan Uribe. Juan Freakin' Uribe, people! I'm dumb-founded.	You can never have too much Juan Uribe in your life.	To see how championship baseball is really played (even in Texas, believe it or not).	Are you kidding? Juan Uribe? Aaron Rowand? Mike Fontenot? OK, yeah, no reason.	I hear the AT&T Park scoreboard has a few tricks up his central processor.
4 What might Ozzie Guillen say as an analyst that he'll regret during the World Series?	"I'm hoping that green-haired one-night stand was Southpaw and not Nicki Minaj."	"You know, I think Taylor Swift is super annoying."	Not really sure we'll understand him, unless, of course, there's a translator.	He'll say something obscene about Joe Buck, but he won't regret it. None of us will.	It's not what he'll say, but what he'll do. First time he touches that laptop in the booth, watch out Twitter.
5 What will we learn about the Chicago Riot indoor soccer team at their news conference Tuesday?	That they've named Ryan Theriot their official mascot.	What their day jobs are.	That Ryan Theriot has quit baseball to coach the squad. His real first love.	Nothing we didn't learn from the Chicago Sting or the Chicago Power.	Does not compute. I'm going to reboot.

STEP UP TO THE PLATE

RedEye

Vanity license plates aren't just for wealthy doctors or cocky lawyers—DR SKIN or LAW MAN anyone? Sports teams can get in on the act, too. Enter the Blackhawks.

A state law in 2002 made it possible for sports teams to have permanent license plates in Illinois. The Hawks are the first Chicago sports team to take advantage of the law. The plate's design will be unveiled at 2 p.m. Tuesday at the Thompson Center.

Now that we have Hawks plates, what should they say? We'd like to see these.

» Bulls coach Tom Thibodeau named his starters for Wednesday's season opener at Oklahoma City, and Keith Bogans has won the shooting guard spot. "He's just been solid," Thibodeau said. "He's earned it."

» Minnesota quarterback Brett Favre is in a walking boot after an MRI exam Monday revealed two fractures in his left ankle (an avulsion fracture and a stress fracture). Neither will require surgery. Coach Brad Childress said Favre's status was "day to day."

» The Bulls on Monday exercised team options on Derrick Rose, Taj Gibson and James Johnson. That means all three players are under contract for the 2011-12 season. Rose and Gibson were mere formalities. However, doubt existed entering training camp about Johnson's status.

SLACKER WEEEN

6 LAST-MINUTE BASHES FOR PARTY PROCRASTINATORS

By Heidi Moore

So you put off making Halloween plans, and now your crew wants to go out after all. We've got your back with this list of last-minute Halloween happenings—no tickets or reservations required—along with costume ideas, so you won't end up as the only person in your group dressed in normal clothes (otherwise known as “the one who buys the shots”).

B movie bash

This year, hosts Jessi Walsh and Patrick Scott move their seventh annual Scary Movie Party from their apartment to The Whistler (2421 N. Milwaukee Ave. 773-227-3530) in Logan Square. Watch a curated series of 10 or so homemade, no-budget scary movies projected onto a screen while Walsh and Scott spin a mash-up of post-punk, metal, dance classics and horror movie sound effects as their German New Wave alter egos, Mit Gas.

Details: 9 p.m. Thursday; no cover

Dress as: Your favorite B horror movie character, such as Ash from the “Evil Dead” films, Bilal from “Basket Case,” Bubba Ho-Tep or Frankenhooker.

Throwback thriller

Bring your crew to Avondale's Late Bar (3534 W. Belmont Ave. 773-267-5283), decked out with cobwebs and crows for The Merge presents Strange Change, a dance party set to screenings of classic 1960s horror flicks. (Expect a heavy dose of Hitchcock.)

Details: 10 p.m. Friday. No cover.

Dress as: A classic '60s horror movie character: Bride of Dracula, Tippi Hedren's character in “The Birds” or Norman Bates from “Psycho.”

Glitter and gore

River West wine bar Juicy (694 N. Milwaukee Ave. 312-492-6620) channels the '70s for Decadence: A Studio 54 Halloween, complete with flashy lights and dozens of disco balls. Photos from the nightclub's hedonistic heyday will be projected onto the walls upstairs while DJs LA Jesus and Fabulous Ladies of Fitness spin.

Details: 10 p.m. Saturday. No cover. RSVP recommended but not required.

Dress as: A Studio 54 regular, such as Andy Warhol, Jerry Hall, Truman Capote or (a very underage) Drew Barrymore.

Spooked out

Head to Simone's Bar (960 W. 18th St. 312-666-8601) for an old-school Halloween Party with spooky decorations—think spider webs, black lights and a fog machine. DJ Jesse De La Pena spins; drink deals include Rogue Dead Guy Ale and New Holland Brewing's Ichabod pumpkin ale for $4.

Details: 10 p.m. Saturday. No cover.

Dress as: A Pilsen hipster/art student in plastic frame eyeglasses and shiny spandex leggings. That's your usual attire? Then pop your collar, shine your loafers and masquerade as a prep.

Grooves from the grave

Boystown bar Scarlet (3320 N. Halsted St. 773-348-1053) hosts a Night of 1,000 Zombies. The bar gets a “creepy old mansion” makeover with eyes peering out from behind old windows recovered from a local building, cobwebs hanging from chandeliers and skulls dangling from tree branches. Well drinks, imported beer and old-school shots are $5 all day.

Details: 9 p.m. Saturday. No cover. Swing by earlier in the afternoon for zombie makeup (3-6 p.m.).

Dress as: What else? The undead. Go vintage (“Night of the Living Dead”) or new-school (circa “Zombieland”).

Slasher soiree

Head up to Roof at the Wit Hotel (201 N. State St. 312-239-9501) for Bloody Sunday, a Halloween murder mystery-themed party. The premise: 103.5 KISS FM morning host DreX is dead, and guests need to figure out who killed him. Question suspects over a Murder on the Roof cocktail ($14), a blend of citrus vodka, St. Germain and Aperol plus orange and lemon juices.

Details: 2-5 p.m. Sunday. No cover.

Dress as: Your favorite “CSI” sleuth or the smart phone-toting Sherlock Holmes reboot.

Hero Horton?

The star of P90X workouts draws a following

The Dallas Morning News

Tony Horton—effusive, energetic, enthusiastic—bounds into a hotel ballroom on a recent Saturday morning and leaps onto the platform set up for him. The 300-plus people in the crowd cheer when he says he's 52. They get even louder when he flexes his biceps and join in as he begins doing jumping jacks, skips an invisible rope.

"Typically," he says, moving all the while, "two to five people walk out the doors after these workouts and hurl in the hallway."

Breathy laughter from the participants.

Jump, jump, skip, skip from Tony.

"I went to a Mexican restaurant last night and ate a nice dinner," he continues. "No sour cream, but I still ate way too much. We went back to my room and did cardio for 50 minutes."

More cheers, more whoops. He descends into the upward-dog yoga position, adds a pushup, does downward dog.

Underneath their borderline-unstoppable sweat, this breathable-fabric wearing crowd swoons. Here, right now, in front of them, talking to them, cracking jokes, doing moves in person that up till now he's only shown them on DVDs they own is ... Tony Horton.

THE Tony Horton: the face, the pecs, the quadriceps, the abs behind (yes that too) the wildly successful P90X ("Go from regular to ripped in 90 days") exercise series.

Its prom-queen popularity—the company claims sales of 2.8 million DVDs, available for three payments of $39.95 (plus $19.95 shipping and handling)—can be attributed to results and testimonials, of course. Add to that the infomercials. Plus the multi-level marketing program of its parent company, Beachbody fitness.

Of the 361 participants at the September event, 180 were "coaches," which is Beachbody lingo for the marketing associates. Though everyone starts out by saying, "Tony changed my life," the next sentence distinguishes coaches from the non.

Those who found the DVDs through infomercials or borrowed them from friends tend to say things like, "This is hard but it works!" Those who have a financial incentive say a variation on this: "I had friends who were transforming their bodies and thought,

GG Typically, two to five people walk out the doors after these workouts and hurl in the hallway." —Tony Horton (above), to a crowd about his P90X workouts

'What are they doing to look so good?'

The program relies on the trademark term "muscle confusion," meaning your body is constantly introduced to new moves and routines. To quote the website, "your body never plateaus, and you never get bored!" (The exclamation point is theirs.)

Is it a good idea?

Meridan Zerner, a personal trainer at Cooper Fitness Center in Texas and a registered dietitian at the Cooper Clinic, says the theory, also known as "periodization," has long been used in sports to enhance an athlete's skill level.

"You don't do the same thing all the time because the body adapts," she says. "If you don't improve, it's maintenance. With this, you tap into different muscle groups, different angles, different intensities."

She just cautions against doing "too much too soon." Plus, she says, when the 90-day regimen ends, fitness and eating right needs to continue. "That's a lot of time, a lot of sweat" that's gone into it, she says.

Horton says people tell him they do it because he makes it fun. "You exercise six days a week and eat healthy foods. Whoa, that's a shock. What I'm trying to do is get people away from pills, processed foods, packaged foods," he says. "We're hoping to make a difference. No excuses. All you need is your body and Mother Earth."

VIDEO GAMES 'EA Sports MMA'

XB360, PS3

It may not have the big Ultimate Fighting Championship license, but there's still a lot going for

EA Sports' new mixed martial arts game. There are plenty of recognizable fighters (Strikeforce's Fedor Emelianenko and legends such as Randy Couture and Frank Shamrock) and an interesting system called Total Strike Control that allows you to move with the left stick on your controller and punch with the right stick. The career mode will keep you busy with the opportunity to train and learn new skills to move your fighter through the ranks. It's entertaining to upload pictures to EA Sports' "GameFace" and almost literally put yourself into the game. Gamers unmoved by mixed martial arts probably won't be converted by "EA Sports MMA," but hard-core fans should strongly consider battling in this virtual hexagonal ring. RYAN SMITH FOR REDEYE, CHICAGONOW.COM/GAMESMITH

HALLOWEEN TV 'Glee'

7 p.m. Tuesday, Fox

Mr. Schuester decides the gleeeks should do "The Rocky Horror Picture Show" as the school play, which is sure to ruin Sue Sylvester's Halloween. FOX PHOTOS

Leachman and Plimpton

'Raising Hope'

8 p.m. Tuesday, Fox

Cloris Leachman brings the scary when Maw-Maw, thinking she's 9 years old, dresses up as a cat to trick-or-treat, then overdoses on candy. It's another funny, touching tale in the comedy's stellar freshman season. When I asked creator Greg Garcia if there is anything he hasn't been able to get Leachman to do on the show, he said: "I've asked her to stop licking me and she said 'No' to that. I've asked her to stop jumping on top of me, she said 'No' to that. Yes, there are a lot of things that I've asked her to do that she says 'No.'"

How old?

Age is only a number when you look as good as these celebs

By Dana Moran | RedEye

Becoming a father for the fourth time might be the most significant thing to happen to Matt Damon this month, but not the only significant development. The "Hereafter" star also turned 40—hard to believe, even though it's been 13 years since his baby-faced turn in "Good Will Hunting." Can you match up more celebs with their real ages? It's harder than you think.

Angelina Jolie

Angelina's been married twice, has dated Brad Pitt since 2005 and has six children. That's a lot of domesticity for someone who spends the rest of her time kicking butt and taking names—and she's done all of it in a pretty short amount of time.

MATCH THE AGES ABOVE WITH THE CELEB

Fist-pumpin' quiz

The "Jersey Shore" gang might act like they're at a frat party, but who's the oldest cast member? Text "age" and the number of your answer to 87708. We'll text you back letting you know whether you were right.

1. Snooki

2. Pauly D

3. The Situation

4. JWoww

Paul Rudd

Aside from a beard, Paul Rudd looks EXACTLY the way he did in "Clueless." And that movie came out 15 years ago.

Gucci Mane

Gucci's rapper name sure sounds a lot like baby talk, but he hasn't been in diapers for a very, very long time. P.S.: His real name is Radric Davis.

Cory Monteith, Mark Salling and Harry Shum Jr. from 'Glee'

We understand that shows about high school kids almost always cast older actors, but sometimes their ages still shock us. Cory Monteith, Mark Salling and Harry Shum Jr., who star as Finn, Puck and Mike, respectively, all play average high-schoolers, but what's hiding behind those baby faces?

James Lipton

The "Inside the Actors Studio" host is one of Will Ferrell's best "Saturday Night Live" impressions, and seems to be wise beyond his years. Or is he?

ANSWER KEY: Rudd=41, Lipton=84, Gucci=30, Jolie=35, Glee guys=28

They 'Shore' did

All hail the Jersey Shore! Those guidos and guidettes turned in big numbers for MTV, averaging 5.8 million viewers for their second season, according to The New York Post. That fist-pumping stat makes "Jersey Shore" the highest-rated series in MTV history, according to the newspaper. Take that, "Real World"!

The rich and the dead

You don't have to be alive to be rich. Michael Jackson was the top-earning celebrity during the past 12 months with a haul of $275 million, according to forbes.com. The King of Pop's estate is so valuable, in fact, he out-earned the other 12 stars on the list combined. Elvis Presley came in at No. 2 with $60 million.

HOT DATE

NOV. 7

That's when an episode of "Undercover Boss" that features Todd Ricketts, a member of the Cubs' ownership family, getting fired from one of the baseball team's maintenance jobs will air on CBS, according to Tribune media writer Phil Rosenthal.

Power coupling?

We're not saying; we're just reporting: Jake Gyllenhaal and Taylor Swift hung out together in New York last weekend and attended the "Saturday Night Live" broadcast, people.com reports. Is there something romantic going on between the 29-year-old actor and the 20-year-old crooner? We'll need more than a vague report to buy into this one.

Franco's orders

James Franco's new movie might have you feeling a bit dizzy—and not because he's so sexy. A few viewers at screenings of "127 Hours" have passed out in the theater due to a scene in which Franco cuts off his own arm, New York Magazine reports. For those with weak stomachs, Franco suggests: "If you're feeling woozy, cover your eyes. There's nothing wrong with covering your eyes."

Zombies will invade downtown Chicago on Tuesday to promote AMC's "The Walking Dead" series, which launches Halloween night. You might not want to get too close to the zombies, but feel free to talk to the brand ambassadors accompanying them about how to win a role as a zombie on the show.
